

Scam awareness reference notes

Use these notes to support facilitator explanations and resident next actions. This is a compilation of paraphrased reference material, based on the linked source advisories.

A1 - Government-official impersonation

Summary of public ScamShield guidance, checked 22 September 2026. Not an official reproduction.

Government officials do not ask for money transfers over a phone call. If unsure about a suspected scam, contact ScamShield at 1799. In the example, a caller uses official authority, secrecy and a transfer request. The training response is to stop engagement and verify through an independent trusted channel, not a number supplied by the caller.

A2 - Check messages through an independent channel

Guidance summary, checked 22 September 2026. ScamShield provides a way to check suspicious messages, calls and links. Its public website also warns about delivery-company impersonation and phishing links seeking personal details.

For the practice quiz, do not follow a link or provide an OTP merely because a message looks professional. Open a known service directly or obtain a contact independently. A benign-looking community reminder may still require verification. Use the workbook classifications to discuss the message evidence.

A3 - Practice patterns for group discussion

Message patterns: paying a deposit to unlock promised earnings, unusually high guaranteed investment returns, and an urgent money request from an unverified acquaintance. Use them to practise pausing and independently checking a request. They do not establish the authenticity of an actual message.

ScamShield publishes scam bulletins and public education resources. Refer to current official guidance for actual cases. Do not teach that good grammar, an official-looking logo, a small payment, or a familiar display name establishes safety.
